Future Knowledge Ecosystems

The opportunity for science and technology parks, places &

The future can be a daunting place. Regions and places around the world are looking for ways they can be more prepared for the opportunities and challenges to come.

Places and regions that are fully integrated, viable, and use knowledge and its application as a major driver in economic development will fair well in this new landscape. For the past 50 years, science and technology parks have led this model. The evolution of this industry's growth as a model for others.

Join us in Raleigh, NC, on June 1–4, 2009, to discuss what the elements of these future ecosystems might entail.

IASP 2009 Update - Don't miss the many activities being planned for you in Raleigh, North Carolina! (28/02/2009)

Plans are shaping up nicely for our 2009 World Conference "Future Knowledge Ecosystems: the opportunity for Science and Technology Parks, places and partners".

This will be an innovative conference where history meets the future with several activities dedicated to celebrate over 50 years of success in our industry. The Research Triangle

Park and the IASP will be commemorating their respective 50th and 25th anniversaries and a special recognition will also be given to the Parks that have reached their 25th anniversary or higher.

In addition to a high quality programme there will also be a special poster session and an exhibition area where you can showcase your Park and network with Science Park colleagues from all over the world.

Attending our World Conference in Raleigh, NC, USA is a rewarding experience you don't want to miss, and we hope that you will join us in this exciting event. If you are planning to attend and have not registered yet, please do so soon! There are only two more weeks to benefit from reduced fees as early registration ends by 13th March.

More information about the next 2009 World Conference can be found on the Conference website at
